“A moment where students stepped into roles that they’ll grow into, one day at a time.”

A Good Start for the Year Ahead

INVESTITURE CEREMONY

Setting the Tone for the Day

The event began with a short Ganesh Vandana performed by the students, a simple welcome that set the tone without making things feel too formal. After the opening performance, representatives from different student councils came up one by one to talk about what their roles meant and the kind of work their councils handle. The school also put together a quick presentation showing what each council had worked on in the past year. It gave everyone students, teachers a clear picture of the effort that usually happens quietly in the background.

SINCE 2001

“Classrooms took a back seat and appetite, games, and laughter ran the show.”

Children's Day Food Carnival at Prestige Public School

Fun became the Main Subject

Prestige Public School turned Children's Day into a small, bustling carnival. Food stalls and Game Corners suddenly became as important as math lessons and everyone wandered around with wide eyes deciding what to try first. Staff and students shared the same mood for once: no rush, no schedule, just the friendly chaos of choices.

A Break That Felt Good to Everyone

By the end, shoes were a little dusty, pockets were lighter, and smiles were louder. Nothing huge happened, but that is exactly what made it memorable. It was a day that simply gave everyone permission to enjoy themselves, and that was enough.

Games, Snacks, and That Easy Festival Energy

Between snacking, cheering, and hopping from one stall to another, students found small pockets of competition and joy; a game here, a treat there, a moment that didn't need much explanation. Even teachers loosened up, chatting casually or grabbing a bite, blending into the crowd instead of directing it.

Periwinkle School and Junior College Visits Shastri Campus

14, November | 2025

“A school field trip that opened a few new windows.”

Not Just a Walk, But a Peek into Possibilities

Students from Periwinkle School and Junior College spent Children's Day on the Shastri campus, wandering through hangars and labs rather than classrooms. There wasn't any big show, just a simple tour where curiosity did most of the work.

Planes, Cockpits, and Questions

The highlight was standing beside a life-size training aircraft, watching tiny faces tilt upward. Inside the cockpit, switches and screens turned into stories: who flies, who fixes, who keeps passengers safe, and how many different hands make one flight happen. The crew roles were explained in a way children could piece together; less technical, more “this is what people do here.”

A Thought Left Hanging in the Air

By the end, the students walked back to their buses carrying more than chocolates or balloons; they carried the idea that an airport is full of real people doing work they might grow into one day.

SINCE 2001

Prestige Public School (SSC) held an environmental awareness workshop for students of Classes VII to IX. The purpose of the workshop was to help students understand what pollution is doing to the environment and show them the small things they can actually start doing in their daily routine.

Looking at Pollution in a Real, Everyday Way

Instead of heavy explanations, the session spoke about pollution in ways the students could immediately recognise: the air they breathe, the water they use, the trash they see around them. It helped them connect what they've heard in textbooks with what's happening right outside their homes.

Environmental Awareness Day

“A session that urged students to pay closer attention to the world they live in.”

A Session That Stayed with Them

By the time it wrapped up, the workshop had done its job. Students walked out still talking about a few examples, still talking about what they could change. It wasn't some big, overwhelming lecture, just a session to make them a bit more aware and a bit more responsible about the spaces they live in.

DGCA Inspection at Wingsss College of Aviation Technology

"Every detail mattered, every claim was verified, and every facility was put to the test."

Matching Standards with What Happens on Ground

The inspectors looked closely at how well the institute's facilities align with DGCA requirements. From tools and training aids to maintenance logs and safety practices, everything was examined for accuracy and consistency. It wasn't just about having the right equipment; it was about whether the systems and processes genuinely support the standards expected from an AME institute.

A Full-Campus Check

The DGCA team visited Wingsss College of Aviation Technology for a detailed inspection, that touched every corner of the campus. Nothing was skimmed over. Every lab, workshop, and classroom was opened up for review, along with the equipment that students use on a daily basis.

The inspection verified that what we state on paper holds up in reality.

Putting Our Commitments to the Test

An inspection like this leaves no space for shortcuts. The team checked whether every commitment made by the institute: academic, operational, and infrastructural, stood firm when seen firsthand. It was a straightforward but rigorous process, the kind that underscores the responsibility that comes with aviation training.

CONSTITUTION DAY

2025 AT PRESTIGE PUBLIC SCHOOL

Reading the Preamble Together

Later, everyone gathered and read the Preamble aloud. It was a moment of tomorrow's youth being built: students standing together, speaking the same lines, realising that the document they study is actually a framework shaping the world they live in.

More than a Routine

It pushed students to think a little, question a little, and see the Constitution as something that belongs to them too. In its own way, the morning managed to make the subject feel less distant and more connected to the way they live, study, and grow.

Looking at the Constitution through Their Own Lens

To mark Constitution Day, students from Prestige Public School spent time creating posters around different parts of the Indian Constitution. Instead of copying definitions, they tried putting ideas into their own words and visuals: rights, duties, equality, freedom, justice, fraternity. The posters weren't just another assignment, but more of students trying to make sense of things that affect lives.

“The session tried to bring the Constitution down from the shelf and into everyday understanding.”

A Simple Lecture with Clear Purpose

Constitution Day at Wingsss Aviation & Hospitality was marked through a straightforward lecture; no big setup, just a room full of students and a conversation about why India's Constitution matters beyond dates and definitions. The discussion opened with the basics: what a Constitution actually is, the idea that it acts as the country's guiding framework, and why India needed one in the first place.

Talking Through the Building Blocks

Constitution Day at Wingsss Aviation & Hospitality

The session walked the students through how the Constitution took shape; how the drafting began in 1947, the role of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, and the work of the Constituent Assembly. Instead of turning it into a history-heavy talk, the session kept things accessible, touching on the sheer scale of the document, the thought behind it, and the intention to create a system that protects people, defines power clearly, and prevents misuse of authority.

Rights, Duties, and How They Fit into Daily Life

From there, the lecture shifted into what the Constitution actually gives us: everything from fundamental rights to the responsibilities expected from citizens. Students heard about the six fundamental rights, the eleven duties added later, and how these two sides keep the whole system balanced. It wasn't an abstract explanation; the focus stayed on how these ideas show up in real life, in behaviour, in everyday choices, and in the way institutions operate.

Internship Placements in Mauritius: A Step Toward Something Bigger

“A doorway that opens onto the real world.”

From Classroom Notes to Island Work Desks

9 Students of Wingss Aviation & Hospitality have begun their six-month internship journey in Mauritius, placed across properties such as Long Beach, IHG Hotels, Ocean Creek, and Ravenala. These young people will walk into a space they've imagined for a long time, but now get to feel with their own hands.

Learning in Real Time

Instead of simulated environments or practice scripts, this chapter will test their patience, curiosity, and ability to deal with people and situations they haven't met before. Different teams, different styles of work, different expectations; without any neat manual explaining how to navigate it. That's where the learning actually begins.

What Makes This Moment Matter

For the institute, it's not just another placement statistic; it's watching students find their footing in places they once read about. For the students, it's the first time their knowledge has to stand up by itself. There's a kind of pride in seeing them step into distant hotel corridors, knowing their names aren't just on attendance sheets anymore but on duty rosters and staff lists.

A Beginning

If anything, this moment isn't just about where they are placed, but about who they begin becoming because of it.

SINCE 2001

“A small act of leaving something behind that grows on its own.”

Celebration of Last Day for Second-Year Students by Planting Trees

A Gesture with Meaning

At Wingsss Aviation & Hospitality, the second-year students marked their last day by planting saplings on campus. It was less about planting trees and more about marking their place in the campus in a way that will outlive them.

As a Memory

Leaving something living behind: as a group, students spent a few minutes talking, teasing each other, and figuring out who would plant where. There was an easy realisation that these plants will be around long after classrooms change and batches move on.

Walking Away with Something to Return To

Once done, everyone looked at the saplings not knowing that it may grow lopsided or taller than expected. Without doing much, it gave the students an unspoken marker of their time here, something rooted in the ground, to visit again someday.

MASTER CHEF COMPETITION AT PRESTIGE PUBLIC SCHOOL (SSC)

“Dads swapped the head of the house seat for aprons, and kids became the loudest sous-chefs in town.”

Fathers Stepped into the Spotlight

Prestige Public School SSC hosted a Master Chef competition unlike the usual ones, it was father-child pairs running the show together. The idea was simple: cook something, have fun, and maybe discover that dads can handle more than remote controls and office meetings.

A Day to Remember

The competition ended with applause, photos, and bragging rights carried home by the winners; but honestly, every pair walked away with something more amusing: stories to tell and the newfound knowledge that cooking together is messy, chaotic, and strangely fun.

A Mix of Laughter, Experiments, and Mini Disasters

Each duo walked in with their own confidence level; some came prepared, some looked like they winged it, and a few dads were visibly praying their kid knew what chopping meant. The tables became little islands of creativity: sandwiches topped with too much mayo, colourful snacks that looked like science projects, and dishes where love showed more than technique.
